Students are not penalized if they are unable to attend classes or participate in exams on particular days because of religious beliefs, in accordance with Chapter 161, Section 224-a of the Education Law of the State of New York. Students who plan to be absent from classroom activity for religious reasons should discuss the absence in advance with their instructors. See college catalog for more information.*

Based on their research, students will develop meaningful questions in order to arrive at the best solution. Students will conduct research regarding their three transfer schools' specific portfolio requirements, and will attempt to solve all three schools with one finished product. In order to arrive at the most efficient and visually attractive method of organizing their portfolios, students will gather, interpret, and evaluate relevant sources of information. Students will search and compile a collection of finished portfolios from a variety of sources, then determine which styles and organizational methods best match their visual sensibilities, then modify and tailor those results to best accommodate their personal organizational needs. In the process of narrowing down the many possible ways that portfolio content can be structured, students will evaluate, discuss, and debate their options in order to reach informed conclusions and solutions. Students will develop several varied approaches to organizing their portfolio prior to undertaking their final finished version. Class discussions of projects that are underway require students to apply reason in order to balance and resolve their own sensibilities with the varied viewpoints raised by the group, as well as opinions put forth by the instructor. The many steps of the portfolio process are broken up, studied, and discussed as the projects progress. Students continually modify and refine their approach.
